Disclaimer This video is for general informational purposes only. Bank When 2025 rolls in, November's calendar is more than a list of dates—it's a map of opportunities for travel, sales, and personal planning. The U.S. federal holidays of Veterans Day, Thanksgiving, and the start of the Christmas season create distinct windows that seasoned hobbyists can leverage. Below, we break down how to read the calendar, the trade-offs of each holiday, and realistic expectations for integrating these dates into your hobby or business schedule. Observed on November 11th, Veterans Day is a federal holiday that does not always translate to a long weekend unless it falls on a Monday. In 2025, the holiday lands on a Friday, giving hobbyists a two-day break to honor veterans or attend local commemorations. For those running a hobby shop or workshop, the late-week shutdown can reduce foot traffic but also allows time to stock inventory or update displays without customer interruption. Trade-offs include missed revenue from the weekend crowd and a need to adjust. Thanksgiving on Thursday, November 26th, is the most significant holiday in the U.S. calendar that drives consumer behavior. The two-day weekend often sees spikes in online sales, travel bookings, and family gatherings. Hobbyists who sell seasonal gear—such as Christmas decorations, outdoor gear, or travel kits—can schedule promotional campaigns to start the week before, capitalizing on pre-holiday shopping. However, the post-Thanksgiving period can be chaotic with returns, and the immediate next week is usually. Offer early-bird discounts for November 20th–25th to capture pre-holiday traffic. Set up a “Thanksgiving Bundle” that bundles complementary products with a clear price point. By the end of November, the calendar shifts from gratitude to anticipation. The final week of the month sees an uptick in gift-shopping and holiday preparation. While there are no federal holidays after Thanksgiving until December, retailers and hobbyists often use this time to roll out late-season promotions. The trade-off is a compressed window—by early December, many customers will be focused on the next major holiday, Christmas, and the calendar’s pace quickens. Get ready for a fun-filled year!
