feelings or single-game props. In a high-stakes setting, that approach quickly erodes bankroll because variance spikes when each pick carries a larger monetary weight. The core problem is a lack of systematic risk control, leaving players exposed to a handful of losing games that wipe out weeks of profit. Before any game is selected, lock in a unit that represents a fixed percentage of total bankroll—typically 1–2%. This prevents a single loss from decimating the fund and scales naturally as winnings accumulate. Integrate metrics such as Defensive DVOA, EPA per play, and opponent turnover differential. These statistics have proven predictive power over simple spread lines and help isolate value bets where the market underprices a team's true performance.
