from federal income tax withholding must understand the purpose, eligibility, and steps of Form 907. The form, filed with the payer, informs the IRS that the worker expects a lower tax liability than typical withholding would cover, helping avoid overwithholding and unnecessary refunds. Unlike employees who receive a W-4, freelancers receive income from multiple clients and often experience uneven cash flow. Without a proper exemption claim, each client may withhold 22 % of payments, strangling a contractor's ability to meet operating expenses. Form 907 offers a targeted solution: it lets the contractor certify that their annual tax liability will be less than the total withheld, reducing the withholding rate to a figure that better matches their projected tax bill. Self-employed individuals who expect a tax liability lower than the amount that would be withheld on a 22 % basis.
