It's time to brush up on everything that went down As March Madness heats up, millions of Americans are filling out their CBS brackets in hopes of snagging the coveted top prize. However, without a solid strategy and a keen eye for under-the-radar upsets, even the most confident bracket enthusiasts can fall victim to costly mistakes. Avoiding these common errors can make all the difference in taking home the championship and ensuring a winning season. Before we dive into the mistakes to avoid, it's essential to understand the basic rules and scoring system of CBS bracket competitions. Each player submits a predicted winner for each match-up, with correct picks earning points based on the level of competition. The player with the most points at the end of the tournament is declared the winner. One of the most significant mistakes bracket enthusiasts make is failing to stay informed about team injuries, coaching changes, and other factors that can significantly impact a team's chances. By neglecting to research and stay up-to-date, you risk picking teams that have a lower chance of winning and ultimately losing points in your bracket. Another common mistake is ignoring potential sleepers and underdogs, which can pay off in big time for those who bet on them. Many players get caught up in the hype surrounding top seeds and neglect to consider the possibility of Cinderella stories. By ignoring these underdogs, you may miss out on opportunities to earn extra points and secure your spot in the top tier of the bracket. Mistake 3: Not Accounting for Upsets Many players overlook the significant impact that home-court advantage can have on a team's performance. A strong home crowd can boost a team's morale and energy, providing a crucial edge in close games. By not considering this factor, you may underestimate a team's chances of winning and lose valuable points in the process. To avoid these common mistakes and ensure a winning season, it's essential to stay informed, recognize potential sleepers and underdogs, account for upsets, and consider home-court advantage. By doing so, you'll be well on your way to crafting a well-rounded and competitive bracket that gives you the best chance of taking home the top prize. Whether you're a seasoned bracket enthusiast or a newcomer to the world of March Madness, avoiding these mistakes will help you stay ahead of the game and achieve a winning.
