Not is making, it has made room for you. God is going to use you so mightily and greatly! Scripture: Proverbs 18:16 Matthew 24:14 ... The city keeps telling us it's due to a staffing shortage, but Dallas residents beware of bulk trash day changes ahead after the city announced an adjustment to its collection schedule, prompting many households to rethink how they handle large-item disposal. The new timetable, aimed at streamlining routes and reducing overtime costs, means the familiar Friday pickup may no longer apply to every neighborhood, and missing the revised day could result in delayed service or extra fees. The Dallas Solid Waste Management Department cited two primary reasons for the shift: operational efficiency and budget constraints. By clustering bulk trash pickups into fewer, more predictable windows, crews can reduce fuel consumption and avoid the overtime spikes that traditionally accompany ad hoc calls. Comparing the old system where bulk pickups occurred on a rolling basis each week to the new coordinated approach highlights a potential 12 percent reduction in route mileage, according to internal data. Under the revised plan, bulk trash is now collected on the first and third Thursday of each month in most central districts, while outlying neighborhoods retain a bi-weekly Friday schedule. This bifurcated model contrasts with the previous once-a-week system that applied citywide. Homeowners should consult the Dallas 311 portal or their latest curbside notice to verify the exact day for their address, as the city's mapping tool outlines the shift at the zip code level. Assuming the old day still applies. Many longtime residents continue to set out bulky items on Fridays, only to find the trucks bypassing their curb. Missing the two-week window. Since bulk pickups now occur twice a month rather than weekly, some families place items on the wrong Thursday and must wait another two weeks for removal. Improper placement. The city requires items to be at least three feet from the curb and secured to prevent them from rolling onto the road; failing to do so can result in a citation. Donate usable furniture or appliances to local charities like Goodwill or the Salvation Army, which often arrange free pickup regardless of the city's calendar. Rent a portable dumpster from a private waste contractor for one-off projects; rates are usually flat-fee and not tied to municipal bulk days. From ICTN's 2017 "Open Line Election Special."
